Spotting your pattern

Noticing what keeps happening, and where it began

By Hedda Knight

BEFORE YOU BEGIN

Patterns are learned

We all have patterns running quietly in the background. A thought that shows up on repeat. Something you keep doing, even when you've promised yourself you won't. A belief about yourself that doesn't quite fit who you are anymore.

These patterns aren't flaws. Most of them were learned for a good reason, often a long time ago. But what once protected you can start holding you back. And you can't change what you haven't noticed yet.

This guide is here to help you notice. To name the pattern, get curious about how it works, and gently trace it back to where it began.

HOW TO USE THIS GUIDE

- Find a quiet moment. A cup of tea helps.
- Write the first thing that comes up. You can edit later.
- There are no right answers here. Only honest ones.
- If a question feels heavy, skip it and come back. One step at a time.

START HERE

What is something you keep noticing yourself thinking, doing or believing that doesn't feel aligned, but keeps happening anyway?

It's mostly something I'm… ☐ Thinking ☐ Doing ☐ Believing

PART ONE

Name it

01 When _____ happens, I _____.

Finish the sentence. Keep it short and simple.

When

I

02 When does it show up most? Think about situations, people, places, times of day.

03 What do you feel just before it happens, and while it's happening? Notice your emotions and your body.

PART TWO

Get curious

04 What do you tell yourself in that moment? Write the words as they sound in your head.

05 What is this pattern costing you? Think about your energy, your relationships, your work, the way you see yourself.

06 Every pattern has a positive intention. What might this one be trying to give you or protect you from?

Safety, approval, comfort, control, belonging…

PART THREE

Where it began

07 When is the first time you remember thinking, doing or believing this? How old were you, and what was happening?

08 Who around you growing up thought, did or believed something similar? What did you learn from watching them?

09 Back then, how did this pattern help you? What did it make easier or safer?

PART FOUR

Coming back to yourself

10 When you hear this pattern now, whose voice does it sound like? Is it truly yours?

11 If this pattern were gone tomorrow, what would you think, do or believe instead?

12 Bringing it together: my pattern in one sentence.

What it is, when it shows up, and what it's been protecting.

You've already started.

Noticing a pattern is the first real step to changing it. Most people never pause long enough to see what's running underneath. You just did.

Seeing it is one thing. Shifting it, at the level where it actually lives, is where support makes the difference. Through NLP-based coaching sessions, we work directly with the subconscious: we find what the pattern has been trying to do for you, honour it, and create a new response that actually fits who you are now.

You don't have to figure it all out on your own.

WORK WITH ME

heddavknight.github.io/Self-Trust-Club

Self Trust Club · selftrustclub@outlook.com · @trustinghedda